Interview conducted by Shusuke Motomiya (ONEUP, Inc.)

A NEW POKÉMON SERIES CREATED BY THE YOUNGER GENERATION

After the release of Pokémon Omega Ruby and Pokémon Alpha Sapphire, Mr. Ohmori, you were made the general director of GAME FREAK's Development Department 2 and entrusted with the task of serving as director for a completely new entry in the Pokémon series. Now, with these games, Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon, you've been serving as producer. Can you tell us why, as a producer, you chose Mr. Iwao to direct Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon?

Ohmori:

When we were working on the development of Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon, Iwao here served as the director of the battle section. I got the chance to see his great potential through the work he did there. He has a deep understanding of Pokémon battle and is particular when it comes to the data structures. Plus, he understands the secrets to making a game with deep gameplay for players to explore, and so I thought that I really wanted to put those skills to better use—and I appointed him to be the director on Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon.

And, Mr. Iwao, how about you? How did you feel when Mr. Ohmori first brought the idea up?

Iwao:

I've worked in the planning division of the Pokémon series since I first joined GAME FREAK. Sure, I'd had my heart set on someday becoming a director, getting to oversee everything and make my own games, but I was surprised to have it happen so much earlier than I'd ever imagined it would.

Ohmori:

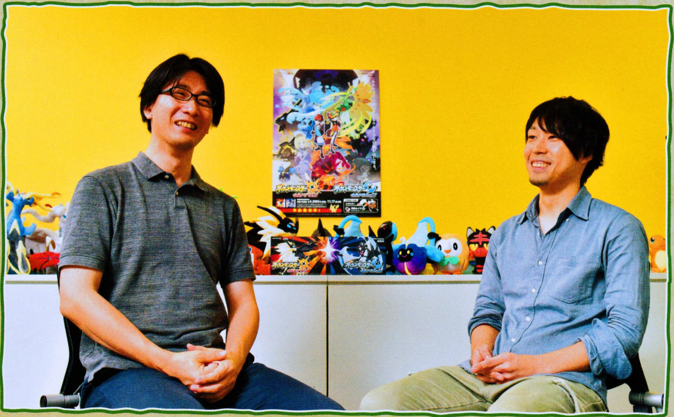
If Iwao, who had also experienced being the battle director, were to take command of the entire game as the director, I thought he would be able to reconstruct the world of Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon into something even deeper. And so I entrusted Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon to Iwao.

You're both rather young, aren't you? How old are you exactly?

Ohmori:

I'm 37 years old. Iwao is 32.

So young! It seems like Mr. Tajiri and Mr. Masuda have really passed the baton and are letting this younger generation take over the Pokémon series.



Iwao:
As soon as I was told about being director, I began to feel the pressure. But I think I would have felt the same pressure at any age. So I told myself that if I was going to have to go through it either way, I might as well get it out of the way as soon as possible. And that's how I got on with things. (Laughs.)

Mr. Ohmori, you're also the father of the Alola region, in effect. When you entrusted that Alola region that you'd created to Mr. Iwao, what were you hoping to see him do with it?

Ohmori:
There were still so many mysteries left unsolved in the Alola region. Things like the Ultra Beasts and Necrozma, for example. What kinds of strengths these Pokémon possess, or how they live. I firmly believed that Iwao would be able to depict that in detail, tying it into the battle system, and so I was able to feel safe leaving the Alola region in his hands.

THE TRENDS OF THE TIMES ALSO GO INTO GAME DESIGN

So, Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon are based on the original Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon, and they serve the role of further developing the story and gameplay features. They are positioned something like 2008's Pokémon Platinum Version. Most such games you've made in the past, including Pokémon Platinum Version, have focused their changes on the final climax of the story. But Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon are different, aren't they? From the very start, the story develops almost like an entirely different game.

Ohmori:
It's been nine years now since Pokémon Platinum Version was released [in Japan]. I think that times have changed in the space of those nine years. The internet has become widely available, and social media is everywhere. Personally, I'm really conscious of the changes of time, and I reflected that in Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon themselves, too. A decade ago, the percentage of people who were active internet users was pretty low, and so you'd normally get people's impressions after they'd really gotten deep into a game and beaten it. Then they'd say, "This game was a real masterpiece, huh?" But nowadays, people's evaluation of whether a game is good or bad is really based on those first impressions they get while playing the first few hours. When this game hits shelves, if our players start playing it and there's nothing different right away, you would start to see negative reports spreading across the internet on the very day it is released—complaints like, "Oh, it's just the same as Pokémon Sun or Pokémon Moon." I wanted to see positive responses from people, that they might say, "This is amazing!" or "It's like a totally new game!" So I had Iwao keep in mind that we wanted to make this the kind of game that would garner positive feedback even if you only played the earliest parts.

> "Nowadays, people's evaluation of whether a game is good or bad is really based on those first impressions they get while playing the first few hours."

Iwao:
It's easier to make an attractive game when you just focus your changes on the latter half of the story. As a creator, there's that desire to just pour everything into the story's climax. But Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon were so well received by players around the world—and now we've got this environment where we have people of all different ages playing Pokémon GO, too—I was plenty conscious of both those facts. I started out with the strong desire to change Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon from the very beginning of the story, but the first feedback that I got from Ohmori was pretty harsh feedback that it didn't feel like it had really changed at all. So then I went back to the very basics of Pokémon. I went and looked back at all our past games. And what that reminded me of was that the thing that lies at the heart of the Pokémon series really is the Pokémon. I thought that players would just want to get their Pokémon as quickly as possible, so in Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon, I changed the flow of the story at the beginning of the game so that you get your first partner—be it Rowlet, Litten, or Popplio—earlier than you did in Pokémon Sun or Pokémon Moon.

Ohmori:
We put a lot of effort into the scene when you first meet Rowlet, Litten, and Popplio in this game, too.

Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon also had that scene where the player gets to choose one of Rowlet, Litten, or Popplio and lift them up in their arms, but the blocking* became more involved in Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon.

Iwao:
Yes, there are more different kinds of shots. It's really the result of the hard work of the staff who handled those event scenes and their desire to make it look as appealing as possible.

THE CORE OF POKÉMON. THE CORE OF AN RPG. SEARCHING FOR THE CORE OF GAMING ITSELF.

Can you tell us what the theme was for the development of Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon?

Iwao:
The idea of the "core." I was really feeling hazy about it for the longest time. I poured a lot of thought into what kind of keyword I should choose, one that would really draw out a different sort of appeal than what Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon had, due to them being made as completely new titles. The setting of the Alola region and the Pokémon that live there are so rich, so I thought, "Why not dig deeper into them?" Of all the words that popped into my head, the one that felt the most fitting to me was "core." What lies at the core of these creatures known as Pokémon? What is the core of an RPG experience? Really, what lies at the core of gaming itself, even? First, I asked all the development staff to think through these questions and try to find their own answers within themselves.

Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon were completely new games, so they were a huge undertaking that we poured time and staff into making. But Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon didn't have the sort of long development period that is afforded to a completely new game. We really care a lot about our development themes at GAME FREAK. The staff in each department are all making their own things, but as long as we have that development theme, things hang together better. It's got that merit going for it.

Where would you say that you focused on this pursuit of the "core" experience?

Iwao:
In Necrozma, which you see on the packages of these games. As we pursued the full story of Solgaleo and Lunala, with Necrozma at its center, we thought about how the Pokémon that appear on the game packages should be treated in the games. What would we need to do to give them the sort of presence that warrants being on the package? That was another way that we dove into this idea of the "core."

---

*"Blocking" refers to the positioning of the camera in film. When planning the blocking of a scene, the director decides when to do a close-up on certain characters, switch from one character to another, use a long shot that shows the entire scene, etc.

It's true that most of the Pokémon featured on past packages have been just waiting in some cave or mysterious location for the player to come find them.

Iwao:
In these games, we wanted to make Necrozma a fascinating character and really show its strength. With that aim in mind, we dug deep into the setting of Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon and came up with Dusk Mane Necrozma and Dawn Wings Necrozma.

> "The moment that I saw them, it just clicked with our theme of the 'core.'"

So which one of you first suggested making a story that focused on Necrozma?

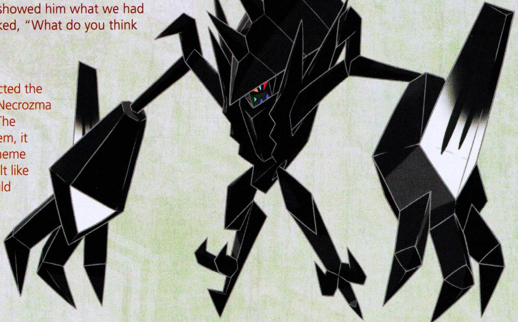
Iwao:
It first came from some of the concept art that came out of the design team.

Ohmori:
I was thinking about what to do with Necrozma from the time when we were developing Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon. This Pokémon known as Necrozma was supposed to be special, but I kept wondering how we were going to show that. I got the suggestion from the designers to have them draw me all sorts of images as we developed those ideas. And what came out of this exchange was this vision of how we could develop Necrozma further. I took them to Iwao, showed him what we had come up with and asked, "What do you think of this plot?"

Iwao:
That plot already depicted the relationship between Necrozma and Solgaleo/Lunala. The moment that I saw them, it just clicked with our theme of the "core." And I felt like it was something I could spin into a real plan.

And what is Necrozma's core?

Iwao:
I dug into the original setting in my own mind, reconstructed it, and gave Necrozma, Solgaleo, and Lunala this deep relationship. Necrozma can control light, but it cannot create light. So it has a strong desire to steal the light from Solgaleo and Lunala, which both possess their own light. These three are always struggling against one another in Ultra Space. Necrozma might steal the light of the others and flee, then Solgaleo and Lunala might give chase and take the light back—and on and on it would go. They had always lived this way, but the balance of this relationship among them was thrown off due to the interference of the Ultra Recon Squad in Necrozma's world and the people living in Alola, like the protagonist. As a result—and even though it really only ever needed a small amount of energy—Necrozma comes to gain a huge amount of energy, beyond what Necrozma itself anticipated, when it captures Solgaleo or Lunala. And because of gaining this excessive amount of energy, Necrozma goes berserk. That is what we call "Ultra Necrozma." And we wanted to depict the drama of the hero encountering this Ultra Necrozma at the climax of the story. It was the actions of people that made Necrozma run amok, but in the end, it will be caught by the player and join them as an ally. Thanks to that, Necrozma will become able to draw forth its own true power again and be able to accompany the player on their island challenge, without needing to target the lives of Solgaleo or Lunala. We wanted to illustrate how the relationship between Necrozma, Solgaleo, and Lunala, which had been destroyed in the past, is forged again by the hero's actions and the balance of the world is restored.



What kind of role does the Ultra Recon Squad play in the midst of this grand drama?

Iwao:
The world of the Ultra Recon Squad, including Ultra Megalopolis, once prospered together with Necrozma. But when those people then tried to control Necrozma by force, they ended up having their light taken from them instead. The characters of the Ultra Recon Squad were added to the story to further impress upon the player how powerful Necrozma is. There's the term "culture hero." It refers to a person or an animal that has had a great impact on the development of human culture in some way, discovering fire or agriculture or something similarly revolutionary. If we used this idea of a culture hero, I thought that it would be possible to add even more depth and appeal to this special Pokémon, Necrozma. To express that, I created a world where Necrozma was a culture hero and gave the Ultra Recon Squad the task of telling that story.

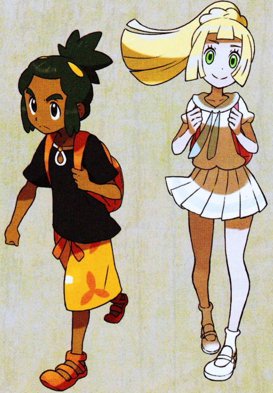
CHANGING CHARACTERS AND THE DEEP REASONS BEHIND THEIR CHANGES

That's very interesting to hear. I'd like to keep asking more about the core of these games' story. First off, we've got Hau's growth.



Iwao:
Hau's amiable character hasn't changed from Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon, but in the latter part of the story, he begins to pursue strength. He grows strong enough to even battle the player to see who will become the first Champion of the Alola region, after defeating all of the Elite Four at the Pokémon League. By digging into that story of his growth and depicting it for the player, I wanted to create this emotional plotline where you set out together with someone as a novice Pokémon Trainer, and you've both put in the same efforts and grown stronger, ultimately to face each other in battle at the climax. And so the "core" theme of Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon is captured in this battle against Hau as well. As the hero, the player learns a great deal and comes to understand Pokémon, gaining strength in battle through the various experiences they have had. I think that is the core of an RPG.

Ohmori:
It's also one of the core experiences that has always been key to the Pokémon series all these years.

Iwao:
When you beat Hau, who has come through the same experiences to be standing on the same stage as you for battle, you can more deeply and fully feel that you've really been able to become Champion.

I felt like Lusamine's personality changed quite a bit.

Iwao:
Her manner has changed, but her true nature hasn't changed from Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon. She still appears cool-headed on the surface, but she also has never stopped thinking of her children. In truth, she even has a true love for Pokémon and desire to protect Pokémon. But from the player's point of view, her actions may appear high-handed, and it is easy to see her as an evil character.

And Lillie becomes a Pokémon Trainer instead of setting out for the Kanto region. Lillie always hated seeing Pokémon get hurt, more than anyone, but she becomes a Trainer. Tell us more about the reasoning there.

Iwao:
As you say, at the end of Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon, she set off on a journey to the Kanto region. That was how the story concluded in Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon. In this alternate world that is depicted in Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon, Lusamine is still well at the end of the story, so I thought to change what happens to Lillie after the main story. Having Lillie's tale end by setting off for Kanto again, just as she did in Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon, wouldn't have inspired any new feelings. We also heard from players of Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon that it was hard saying good-bye to Lillie. In Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon, I thought to have the story develop so that Lillie wouldn't need to set out on a journey, by instead making her dreams come true. In the Team Rainbow Rocket episode, Lillie achieves the dream that she'd held at the end of Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon—she gets to play an active role as a Pokémon Trainer. But sending out powerful Pokémon and going all out in battle isn't the sort of battle strategy that suits Lillie. She thoroughly supports the player with Clefairy instead. We wanted to show that this is another valid way to battle in Pokémon, as well.

> "What we wanted to express with these many sub-events was how deep the relationship is between Pokémon and people."

If you were to sum up the Team Rainbow Rocket episode, it's basically a story in which the bosses of all the villainous teams from the past titles appear together. Even after clearing the episode, though, there are still so many questions left. Were those bosses real? Giovanni, at least, definitely feels like the real Giovanni. But then why change the team's name from Team Rocket to Team Rainbow Rocket? There are still so many questions in my mind.

Iwao:
When it comes to the Team Rainbow Rocket episode, it's fine for the players who play the game to interpret the events as they see fit. The one certain thing is that we've added to Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon this idea of parallelism, where it's possible to travel between the Alola region and other worlds through an Ultra Wormhole. The appearance of Team Rainbow Rocket is one way to make visible to players one possible outcome of that fact. When characters like Cyrus and Ghetsis are talking in Team Rocket's castle, it's not clear which world they've come from. We made it so that each player could have their own feelings about it and they could all be correct. As for the name "Team Rainbow Rocket," it was really quite simple. Looking at these powerful bosses in Team Rainbow Rocket, each with completely different personalities, they are like the seven different colors of the rainbow. So we named them Team Rainbow Rocket.

EVEN A SMALL FLOWER IN THE PATH GETS A DOSE OF THE "POKÉMON PHILOSOPHY"

After putting in all these different elements, the scope of the scenario—including so-called sub-events—far exceeds that of Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon. Did you plan from the start to add so many new scenario elements?

Iwao:
We weren't really planning to add so many sub-events when development started out. But the staff working on the scenario and event planning were very passionate, and midway through development, we realized that a variety of events was what would really make these titles appealing. What we wanted to express with these many sub-events was how deep the relationship is between Pokémon and people. By adding all these little episodes that focus on people interacting with Pokémon, we were trying to make players feel more immersed in the world of Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon.

Ohmori:
The large number of sub-events is, I think, a reflection of Iwao's great character. He made it feel easy to talk about different ideas and share opinions, and there was really open communication on the project. Someone would propose an idea, then someone else might add more ideas onto it. From my point of view as a producer, I felt like, "Wow, they're really having fun making this." And I think that the results led to the high quality of Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon.

Iwao:
The idea of interacting with Pokémon in the field also came about from an idea of one of the development staff members.

In past games, you might be able to talk to Pokémon in the field and they would have their unique cries, you know, like "Grawr!" or "Bow! Bow!" Seeing them depicted like that was something players could enjoy. And it was fun enough on its own, but these games really take it a step further and make it possible to interact with the Pokémon.

Iwao:
I can't help wanting to use those ideas that make it possible to feel like Pokémon are living creatures or that allow players to more deeply understand how they live.

> "I can't help wanting to use those ideas that make it possible to feel like Pokémon are living creatures."

When you get close to these Pokémon and then talk to the people standing nearby, they'll tell you the Pokémon's nickname, right? I was astonished by that. "They put that much thought into it!" I said to myself.

Iwao:
It's the embodiment of the "Pokémon philosophy." The Pokémon that you can interact with aren't wild Pokémon. They're someone's Pokémon. So naturally they have names, and you can't catch them.

Ohmori:
I've got a funny story about the "Pokémon philosophy." The truth is that even the positioning of the flowers in the field is a reflection of it. When I was new to the company, I worked on making the maps, and I kept getting criticized by one of my seniors, a fellow named Koji Nishino. (Laughs.) I'd thought that I was just putting flowers in the field to make the area look a bit more cheery. So when Nishino saw the map and how I'd placed the flowers, he asked me, "Is this a route that people walk on? Is it a game trail that Pokémon use to move about?" If it's a path that people walk, then flowers won't bloom there. If you put flowers in front of a store, then people would step on them, so you can't put them in the path to the store's entrance. He taught me all kinds of things like that. Putting thought into where you place every last little flower—that's the "Pokémon philosophy."

Iwao:
Flowers are also a necessary part of the map. If there are beautiful flowers in bloom, the players will be drawn to them and want to get closer to them. Even flowers can be used to lead the player in their journey.

Ohmori:
When you place flowers near the entrance or exit of a path, you can get some sense of accomplishment, like "I can see the flowers now. I've made it through this route." Using flowers can have a real impact on the gameplay experience. When you see flowers, you feel like safety must lie beyond them, and so everyone naturally makes for them.

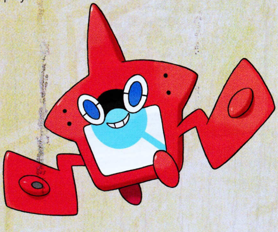
PUTTING EVERYTHING INTO A GRAND CULMINATION OF THE NINTENDO 3DS GENERATION

I'd like to ask about some of the new features added into Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon. The new UI (user interface) that was introduced in Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon has gotten further improvements, and it's become even easier to play.



Ohmori:
Improving the gameplay experience is something that we at GAME FREAK are all universally pursuing, and not just in the Pokémon series.

Iwao:
In Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon, we used the UI from Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon and added some improvements to make it even easier to play.

I was surprised by the feature that lets you communicate with your Rotom Dex and get closer to it.

Iwao:
The Rotom Dex is the fusion of a Pokémon and a Pokédex. Since it has the functions of a Pokédex and allows you to actually speak with a Pokémon, I thought I wanted to add even more ways to play with it. In a regular RPG, the hero normally has a party of allies. In a Pokémon game, that's your party of Pokémon. But I also wanted to have something that you could feel closer to and more easily achieve some mutual understanding with, so we increased the ways that players can communicate with the Rotom Dex in these games. I felt anew that I wanted the player to have the sort of ally that would remark on what you see as you progress in your island challenge together, or ask for your take on things, so we made the conversations with the Rotom Dex richer and added the element that Rotom's personality would change based on how the player responds to it. It's like the way that people start to act and sound like one another after being friends a long time.

The number of Pokémon that you can register in the Rotom Dex has increased from 300 to 400. Why did you add 100 more Pokémon?

Iwao:
Because we felt like we didn't want to make the people who had played Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon do the same thing over again. We talked a lot about how many Pokémon we should add. Like, wouldn't it seem about right to add 151 Pokémon? (Laughs.) In the end, we restrained ourselves to adding just 100 more, so it would truly feel like it had increased but without also making the hurdle to completing [the Pokédex] too high either.

Collecting Totem Stickers was a lot of fun!

Iwao:
The inspiration for collecting Totem Stickers was rather close to that of the Rotom Dex. We came up with the idea because we didn't want to make Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon players have to collect all of the Zygarde Cores and Zygarde Cells again. The truth is the Totem Stickers are stuck up by the captains of the various islands. We don't explain that detail in the games, but you'll find that the stickers' placement reflects a bit of each captain's personality. If you haven't collected them all yet, look closely and see if you notice anything. And there are things like Team Skull—being the rather rough group that they are—just sticking all the Totem Stickers from around Po Town on top of one another in one place. When players are out collecting Totem Stickers, I hope they'll let their imagination be sparked as they wonder which captain placed each sticker. I think it's even more fun that way.

Mantine Surf ended up being a pretty serious action game. That took me by surprise. At first it took some practice, but once I learned to use aerial moves, it really felt great. I thought it felt like the perfect feature to take a little breather with during the island challenge.

Iwao:
There were two things that really led to us making Mantine Surf. One was just for the variety. The main drive of a Pokémon game is to catch Pokémon, battle with them, and clear the story. But we wanted to add some variety to liven things up, so we added this action minigame. The other reason was the setting of the Alola region. When we were trying to reexamine the appeal of the Alola region, we realized that surfing was just the sort of thing that would suit it.

I'd like to ask about Ultra Warp Ride. The space that you travel through is full of mysteries.

Iwao:
Ultra Space did appear in Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon, but now in these games, you can take advantage of Solgaleo and Lunala's power to freely travel through it. The idea with Ultra Warp Ride is that Solgaleo or Lunala creates a path for you that you can travel along. Solgaleo and Lunala have the power to go into Ultra Wormholes.

Using these Ultra Wormholes, you can go to the worlds where Ultra Beasts live. The scenery is very strange, and it really spurred my interest in the Ultra Beasts.

Iwao:
The existence of the Ultra Beasts came to light in Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon. But we didn't go deeply into how these Ultra Beasts lived and we left them a mystery, so in Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon, we've uncovered one of these mysteries: the worlds that the Ultra Beasts live in. Each Ultra Beast lives in an entirely different kind of world, so I hope that our players will all go around to see each one.

> "I think everyone develops an emotional attachment to the Pokémon that they travel together with."

And you can catch the Legendary Pokémon from past generations using Ultra Warp Ride.

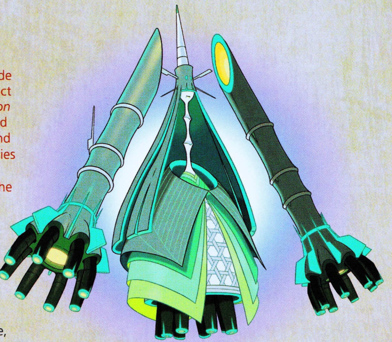
Iwao:
We did decide to have all of the Legendary Pokémon appear in Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon, and that decision was made from a marketing standpoint. First, there's the fact that Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon are games developed based on Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon. But we also have to keep in mind the people who might be playing a Pokémon series game for the first time with Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon. You can catch all of the past Legendary Pokémon using the Soar feature in Pokémon Omega Ruby and Pokémon Alpha Sapphire, but we wanted to make it so that you could [do the same] if you just fully play Pokémon Ultra Sun or Pokémon Ultra Moon.

You can catch a lot of different Pokémon species in Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon. There's the Ultra Warp Ride, of course, and then there are also new Pokémon you can catch using the Island Scan feature. If you collect Totem Stickers, you can receive large Pokémon like the Totem Pokémon. If you become the top-ranked surfer on all of the Mantine Surf courses, you can get a Pikachu that knows the move Surf. This seems like the most fan service that we've ever seen.

Iwao:
While we were making the game, we did end up wanting to put in lots of fan service. (Laughs.)

Tell us about the new battle facility that has been added to these games—the Battle Agency.

Iwao:
First of all, we wanted to lower the threshold for Pokémon battling. Because players can borrow all sorts of different Pokémon in this feature, anyone can get a taste of the true depth and thrill of Pokémon battling without struggle. Plus, we also wanted to change Festival Plaza. Festival Plaza is where we've collected together all our communication features, but if all it had was the exact same features as in Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon, then I was afraid our players would just end up feeling like there was no reason to visit it again. We added the Battle Agency feature in the hopes that players would then have a reason to want to visit Festival Plaza every day. The Pokémon that you can borrow change each day, plus you can also borrow Pokémon from other players around the world using communication features. We wanted players to experience the exhilarating feel of winning their way through Pokémon battles with strong Pokémon.



Now, the Alola Photo Club feature is something right in sync with the social media age...

Iwao:
We definitely had it in mind that people would upload the pictures that they take to their social media accounts. There's a feature within the game as well that allows players to show their photos to the people they encounter in Festival Plaza, but I think the main space for it is probably going to be social media. Whether you're a player who has been playing for a long time or someone who just recently started, I think everyone develops an emotional attachment to the Pokémon that they travel together with. And a photo is really the best way to show the depths of those bonds and the relationship and closeness you've built up with those Pokémon in a lasting way. I hope that players will bring their favorite Pokémon to Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon from various titles using the download software for Nintendo 3DS systems, Pokémon Bank, then take pictures together with them to save.

I have a question for Mr. Ohmori. From your perspective as producer, what do you think of Mr. Iwao's work?

Ohmori:
I feel like I can really count on him. Iwao has been helping with development as a GAME FREAK creator since Pokémon Black Version and Pokémon White Version (2010). I've seen how he works over this time, so I have a lot of trust in him. My work as producer is to have a different perspective than a director does—to consider things like how to market a game or how to proportion staff in response to the stage of development. I didn't work on the game's content but on the tasks that lie outside of the game development. I basically left Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon in the hands of the director, and it was my position to just watch over things. But it was also my first time experiencing the job of being producer, so I was nervous the entire time, too. Always wondering, "Am I really doing all right?" But in the end, I saw that the game that Iwao and the others were making was becoming quite fun, so I was able to feel, "Yeah. This should be all right."

> "Even among the history of Pokémon titles, Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon have been developed as a new sort of entry in the series."

Tell me why you chose to put the word "ultra" in the game titles.

Ohmori:
Even among the history of Pokémon titles, Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon have been developed as a new sort of entry in the series, and so we had to think long and hard about what to call them.

Iwao:
They're to maintain what lies at the core of Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon. And be a culmination of the Pokémon series on the Nintendo 3DS platform. There are many such considerations that went into Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon, so our feeling was that, whatever else, we wanted to make these powerful games. We had a lot of different title candidates, but in the end we chose to go with the word "ultra."

Ohmori:
At the beginning of this interview, we talked about how we wanted the game to be drastically different from the very beginning of play, and those changes feel somehow "ultra." Then we've got so many terms, like Ultra Beasts and Ultra Necrozma and Ultra Burst... Given their existence, and considering the meaning of the word "ultra," I think you can feel another level of depth in the story.

My last question. Tell me how you'd like to see players play Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon.

Iwao:
We poured every detail into the world you originally saw in Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon, from the brightness of the sunlight to the color of the ocean seas. I think I'd like to see players enjoy it as a true role-playing experience—to feel that they themselves are the hero who has just moved to the Alola region and is getting their first Pokémon from Professor Kukui and setting off on an island challenge of their own. The character that you control is the hero, and that hero is you. I'd be happy if players could enjoy that pure thrill that RPGs offer. That's why I tried to put everything into the game that you might need to do that.

Ohmori:
Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon have been made with a lot of care. They're the kind of games where even players who are playing a Pokémon series game for the first time won't feel lost and can slip right into the world they depict. Some people might have gotten interested in Pokémon from playing Pokémon GO, or maybe they've been feeling nostalgic playing through the Virtual Console editions of Pokémon Gold and Pokémon Silver. Everyone has their own reasons for wanting to play the Pokémon series, but Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon can undoubtedly be enjoyed by anyone. And it's also fine for players to then go back and play Pokémon Sun or Pokémon Moon for the first time, after playing these games. I really wonder what players will think if they go back and play Pokémon Sun or Pokémon Moon after playing these titles. I've put so much time into playing Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon already that I wonder how they would look in the eyes of someone who plays Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon first. I'd love to hear what people think. If you love Pokémon, I hope you'll encourage lots of people around you to check out these games and have fun playing them together.

What It Takes to Create a Pokémon

Special interview with Ken Sugimori, the art director of the Pokémon series.

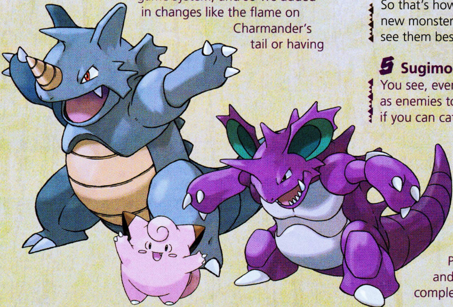
POKÉMON—BORN FROM THE COUNTERCULTURE SPIRIT

I'd like to look back to the development of Pokémon Red and Pokémon Green, originally released in 1996.* RPGs were all the rage in the game scene in those days, with so-called "fantasy" games being the main offering. And then GAME FREAK's Pokémon Red and Pokémon Green cut right through them all. When I first played the games back then, the design and expression of the monsters felt so original.

Sugimori:
That's true. The orthodox fantasy RPGs were what was popular in those days, but there was also this group of young, ambitious developers who were sending out into the world RPGs that took a different path. Our Pokémon Red and Pokémon Green were developed as a part of that trend. It was basically a counterculture movement.

And the pinnacle of that counterculture movement led to the creation of these creatures known as Pokémon. Tell us about how Pokémon were first born.

Sugimori:
It first started with designs of dinosaurs and monsters in a super-deformed style. They had fangs and long tails, and spikes jutting out all over their bodies. It started with Pokémon like Rhydon and Nidoking, for example. And when we looked at them all together, the designs felt rather uniform. So then we started adding cute Pokémon, like Clefairy and Pikachu. As the games' development progressed, we added the idea of "types" to the game system, and so we added in changes like the flame on Charmander's tail or having a plant growing on Venusaur's back. When the designs became something that seemed to make sense, well, that was when I really felt that we'd been able to create creatures unlike anything in any other RPG.



I've heard that the theme of people and Pokémon coexisting was there from the start in Pokémon Red and Pokémon Green, is that right? How does this theme of coexistence affect Pokémon design?

Sugimori:
In the earliest days of Pokémon Red and Pokémon Green's development, I drew a piece of concept art. Even in those days, there were Pokémon that would let people ride on their backs like horses do, Pokémon that would take you to distant places like an airplane might, and Pokémon that would go everywhere with you as your partner. What really came out of that was the sense of each Pokémon's size. If they were as huge as dinosaurs, they couldn't really coexist with humans, so we used humans as a standard and settled down into designing the Pokémon to be a bit bigger or a bit smaller than people.

> "Even when Pokémon appear before you as enemies to fight, they'll become your allies if you can catch them."

So that's how you ended up creating these entirely new monsters that feel completely natural when you see them beside people, is that it?

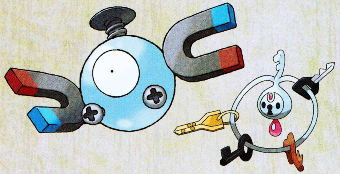
Sugimori:
You see, even when Pokémon appear before you as enemies to fight, they'll become your allies if you can catch them. That's the way they are constructed. Even if we had Pokémon that had frightening stories behind them or looked unsettling, we give them a sort of charm and depict them in a way that you feel you could get close to them. This idea of "charm" is a basic part of every Pokémon's design. We give every Pokémon some sort of friendly aspect, and we've never made a Pokémon a complete villain in our stories.

> "This idea of 'charm' is a basic part of every Pokémon's design."

I always hear that another key concept for Pokémon is their vitality—they have to feel alive—just as much as they need to capture that coexistence with people. In the battle scenes in Pokémon Red and Pokémon Green, the Pokémon is shown from behind. I feel like designing these monsters not just from the front but even designing how they would appear from behind really helps create this sense of vitality.

Sugimori:
The original idea behind showing the Pokémon's backs in battle was a question of camera work. The battles in Pokémon Red and Pokémon Green were designed to appear in first-person view for the Pokémon's Trainer—in other words, from the player's own point of view. Unlike in other games, Pokémon games didn't have the main character fighting against other humans. The ones doing the fighting were the Pokémon, so what you would see in front of your eyes was the back of your Pokémon. And if we were going to go to the work of drawing out those backs anyway, we wanted to put the effort into adding details there as well for players to discover. Like, for example, the wings on Clefairy's back, which look like a bow. And that's how Pokémon get designed. I guess more than "vitality," showing the Pokémon's backs contributes to creating a sense of realism. Pokémon Red and Pokémon Green were sold for the Nintendo Game Boy, and it had a monochromatic palette that could only show four shades. That was the kind of limit we were working with, but I still wanted those backs to appear real.

The uniqueness of Pokémon designs can be seen in how some Pokémon have been based on inorganic items as well. When I noticed that Klefki was based on a key ring in 2013's Pokémon X and Pokémon Y, it reaffirmed for me the variety and richness of Pokémon. There aren't many who would think to design monsters around not only living things but to use non-living items as a motif.



Sugimori:
I suppose the first example of using an inorganic object for a Pokémon's motif must have been Magnemite, in Pokémon Red and Pokémon Green. That was an idea that the games' director, Satoshi Tajiri (President of GAME FREAK inc.) thought up. On the work order, he'd just written something like: "A magnet Pokémon." (Laughs.) Then I designed it.

IT'S NOT ENOUGH JUST TO BE COOL. YOU HAVE TO ADD SOMETHING THAT KEEPS PEOPLE'S ATTENTION.

I'd like to get into the real meat of the interview now and ask about our main theme: what it takes to create a Pokémon. I've often seen you say in magazine interviews and the like that you start the design process by thinking about how a Pokémon must live, its physique, even what it eats.

Sugimori:
One of the biggest things to decide there is what the Pokémon eats. I think everyone must wonder about that. It's easy to imagine when it's a Pokémon like Snorlax, which eats anything, but we have a lot of Pokémon with mysterious bodies or no mouths. And so what do Pokémon based on inorganic items, like Magnemite, eat? It's the job of GAME FREAK's creative team to make sure there are proper answers for all these kinds of Pokémon. And then it's the job of us in the design team to make the ideas that the creative team came up with seem convincing.

This may be a stupid question, but what do Pokémon with no mouths eat?

[*] The first two games released in the Pokémon series were Japan's Pokémon Red and Pokémon Green, while the first games to be brought to other regions were Pokémon Red and Pokémon Blue.

[] "Super-deformed" art is a caricaturized art style used in Japan, typically showing characters looking small and cute, with the head disproportionately large compared to the body.

Sugimori:
Ghost-type Pokémon, for example, might feed on the spirit, or reap energy from the air around them. Whether or not we can think of something for a Pokémon to survive on is a huge turning point in the creation of any Pokémon. If we were going to make a Pokémon based on the motif of a car, for example, what would it eat? Would you make it able to suck up gasoline? How would it use the energy it got from that—how would it use that source of power? Even if the design is based on a car, a Pokémon is a living creature, so we would work over and over how to express its "car-ness" and what its source of energy should be.

So thinking through each Pokémon's energy source connects to expressing the vitality of each Pokémon.

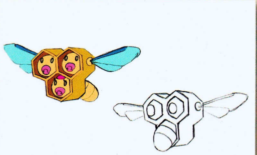
Sugimori:
It pretty much does. The act of eating something and turning it into energy has a lot to do with creating that sense of vitality for a Pokémon. I think that's an important expression of a living creature. In our recent games, you can do things like directly giving food to your Pokémon using features like Pokémon Refresh. So now when we design Pokémon, deciding their eating habits has become an even more important aspect to consider.

If you aren't able to show what they eat to survive, then they really do just end up being creatures of fantasy, don't they?

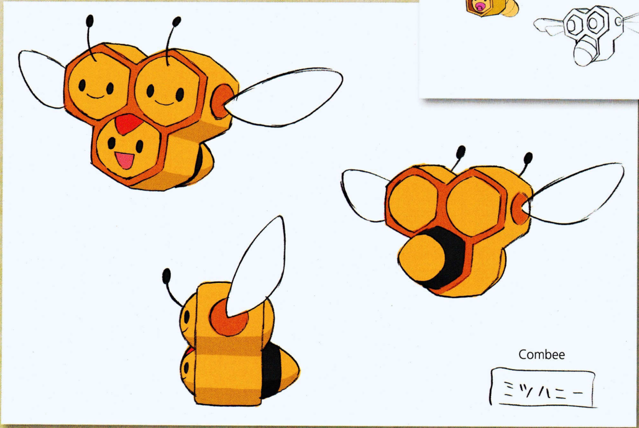
Sugimori:
Pokémon really are, as you've heard many times, "mysterious creatures." We depict them that way, but I also think that it's important we don't make them too mysterious. Mystery is appealing, but if you go too far in that direction, it's hard to feel close to a creature that's too unfamiliar. Are our players going to look at a Pokémon and say, "That could never be real." Or won't they? Restraint is important so that we can aim to just skirt that line without going over it.

On that note, Mr. Sugimori, you've said on many occasions, "I don't think up Pokémon on my own. It's a group effort to think them up. My job is just to make the end product."

- Rough sketches



- Setup sheet



Sugimori:
(Pulls a document from a clear file folder.) That's right. I brought an example that makes it easy to understand what I mean. This is the setup sheet for Combee, and the rough sketches we came up with before that.

These are precious documents.

Sugimori:
So first the design team just got an order like, "Pokémon made up of three honeycombs stuck together." The ideas that our designers came up with based on that were these rough sketches. We came up with the design of having three larvae wedged into the honeycombs, but that's pretty awfully realistic, isn't it? (Laughs.) It's very bug-like, that's for sure. It was a funny idea, but I thought it was rather gross. You can't help but think of them wriggling around in there, and even the construction itself—having the three of them stuck together and nesting like that—felt a bit gross. But the truth is that's a critical point. "Gross" is captivating, after all. It's the hook that gets your attention, and it can be what makes a character distinctive, so the idea stuck around. So when we kept that idea without discarding it, we turned our minds to how we could make it a friendlier design, and I thought we might try to make the faces look excessively comic. We put together that realistic body structure with the sort of simple, symbol-like faces that you used to see in very old comic books.

There's some overlap between the rough sketches and the final design, but the atmosphere changed quite a bit, didn't it?

Sugimori:
When I'm finishing up with the design for a Pokémon, I'm often working to get it balanced. If a Pokémon seems too cool, I might try to give it a little something to make it uncool. If a Pokémon seems too serious, I might try to give it a little something cheery. Sort of like we were talking about before with making the design friendlier—I also tend to take the cool characters and make them uncool. (Laughs.)

You do? But Pokémon like Lucario and Luxray are really cool!

Sugimori:
Luxray would be even cooler if its head was a bit smaller and its eyes narrower. But I dare not make adjustments to make a Pokémon even cooler.

That's what gives your designs that distinctive "Sugimori" sense, isn't it?

Sugimori:
I'm often telling the members of the design team to take something away from a design that's too cool, but it's just intuitive, so it's probably hard to understand. After all, it's ultimately subjective—to say what is cool or not. It's a bit of an exaggeration, but my role is basically to purposefully add the thing that makes people think, "It would be so cool if it just didn't have this thing!" (Laughs.) Because, in short, if a Pokémon is too cool, it won't capture a player's heart.

It will become just something to admire, like a beautiful landscape painting, is that it?

Sugimori:
That's right. You'd think, "That's cool!" And that would be the end of it. If it's something that we send out into the world as a Pokémon, we really do want it to be something that will stick in your mind and make a lasting impression. To do that, I think that you always have to add that one little something. Look at Oshawott's face, for example. It has three freckles on its cheeks. If you took those away, Oshawott would look even cuter. But if you took them away, its face would become forgettable. I was told by plenty of people that they wanted me to remove the freckles, in fact. But I kept strongly insisting that it was better to have them. That's the right way to design a Pokémon, according to my standards.

LOOKING BACK AFTER EACH SET OF NEW ENTRIES AND HOW POKÉMON DESIGNS SHIFT AND CHANGE

If I might change the subject, I'd like to ask about how Pokémon designs change over time. First off, we've got the Pokémon from Pokémon Red and Pokémon Green, which enjoy a deep and lasting popularity. Maybe because they were the first, after all? You can feel a simple goodness in them.

Sugimori:
It wasn't that we were aiming for simple designs, but the graphic capabilities of the Nintendo Game Boy hardware were quite simple. (Laughs.) We couldn't use color, and the pixels were so large, so I think we really had no choice but to design them to be simple. The result being that it created a foundation for making these characters that were easy to understand, so when I look back on it now, I think it was really a stroke of good fortune. If we'd been working on computer graphics or something with a higher resolution, we might have ended up drawing more detailed designs and throwing color all over the place. I think it's good that we ended up able to create these sort of simple designs, like making Grass-type Pokémon mostly green and so forth.

Then Pokémon Gold and Pokémon Silver were made to be compatible with the Nintendo Game Boy Color, and you could suddenly use 56 colors at the same time. The formerly monochromatic Pokémon got decked out in lively color.

Sugimori:
We made Pokémon Gold and Pokémon Silver as direct sequels to Pokémon Red and Pokémon Green. It was like taking the world and designs of Pokémon Red and Pokémon Green, and just expanding on them.

The Pokémon that hatched from Eggs, like Pichu and Togepi, were a big hit.

Sugimori:
That's true. We emphasized the prettier side of Pokémon. If we were to consider the Pokémon of Pokémon Red and Pokémon Green as serving as a foundation, then in Pokémon Gold and Pokémon Silver we really expanded on the sense of character of each Pokémon. I realized that everyone really likes cute things. (Laughs.)

Then there were Pokémon Ruby and Pokémon Sapphire for the Nintendo Game Boy Advance.

Sugimori:
We had more young staff joining the design team at that time, and that affected the Pokémon designs. I did most of the Pokémon designs myself, relatively speaking, for Pokémon Red and Pokémon Green, as well as in Pokémon Gold and Pokémon Silver, but my participation began to go down with those games. I think that the feel of the Pokémon changed quite a bit as a result. Pokémon Ruby and Pokémon Sapphire were developed from the start with the thought that we should try to do something different than what we'd done up until then. There was that sense of danger that if we just did the same thing over and over, people would get bored. I think that awareness was reflected in the designs of the Pokémon as well. There were more "mecha"-looking Pokémon* and more stylish designs.

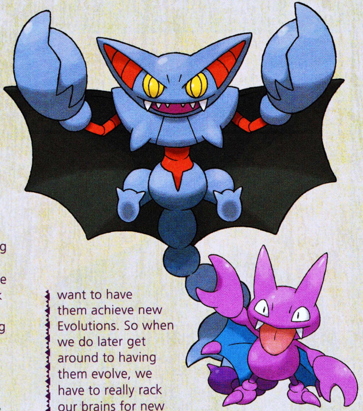
> "In short, if a Pokémon is too cool, it won't capture a player's heart."

Next were Pokémon Diamond and Pokémon Pearl, which made the leap onto the Nintendo DS hardware.

Sugimori:
The designs of the Pokémon that first made their debut in Pokémon Diamond and Pokémon Pearl followed a similar trajectory as those for Pokémon Ruby and Pokémon Sapphire. We also added Evolutions for a lot of the Pokémon that didn't evolve in Pokémon Red and Pokémon Green, or in Pokémon Gold and Pokémon Silver, and which hadn't been able to have a big role in battle.

Like having Tangela evolve into Tangrowth, or Gligar evolve into Gliscor, is that it?

Sugimori:
I think people got to experience a lot of surprise as they realized, "Oh, this Pokémon can actually evolve!" That methodology eventually led later to ideas like Mega Evolution and regional variants. But when we were first designing those Pokémon, we weren't always thinking that we'd someday want to have them achieve new Evolutions. So when we do later get around to having them evolve, we have to really rack our brains for new ideas. (Laughs.)



Because having a Pokémon evolve isn't always as simple as just having them get bigger or giving them more muscles, now, is it?

Sugimori:
That's certainly one way to do it, but if that was all we ever did, it would be boring. We found new ways to evolve. And when we started implementing them, the world began to feel even wider. I think that all Pokémon hold within them an equal likelihood of achieving even greater Evolution. And feeling that way has been another reason why I've felt the additions of Mega Evolution and regional variants have been so good.

So how about Pokémon Black Version and Pokémon White Version? In those titles, you had more than 150 species of Pokémon appear, all of them new. And the games' settings had been based on Japan up until then, but the Unova region was instead based on New York, in America.

Sugimori:
It was really a big task to design over 150 new Pokémon from scratch. Think of the bird Pokémon, for example. They fly around in the towns and really serve as a part of the setting. Just by having new bird Pokémon flying through a town, you can show that this is a different world. Those details serve as a base, and in the eyes of the people playing the games, they may also change the feeling that they get from the Pokémon series. What I really felt from making Pokémon Black Version and Pokémon White Version was the importance of having only unknown Pokémon appear. How fresh and new would a setting feel if you really didn't see even a single Pokémon that you already knew? We got to try that out for ourselves. And I think that's how we got to show that the Unova region was a completely different land than those in our previous titles.

*"Mecha" refers to giant robots and similar mechanical creations.

In Pokémon X and Pokémon Y, there was a revolutionary change as the Pokémon changed from 2D pixel-based sprites to 3D CG models. I guess that the change to 3D modeling must have had a big impact on Pokémon design.

Sugimori:
It certainly did. Having a well-formed three-dimensional design became more important than ever before. In the age of 2D sprites, we could make the game with just a front and a back image of a Pokémon, but when you're depicting a Pokémon with a 3D model, you have to add side views from both sides and have a total of four designs then. And the details are even worse. For example, even back in the 2D sprite age, we decided things like the shapes of a Pokémon's claws or their number—but when it comes to 3D modeling, even deciding the shape that the claws will have in cross-section becomes a critical design element. I think you'll be able to understand how much work that is if you look at our design documents.

The work has really multiplied, hasn't it? But I do get the impression from the Pokémon that undergo Mega Evolution that you had fun with the design there.

Sugimori:
It was fun. But even in Mega Evolution, we avoided the sort of designs that would seem like simply adding on and exaggerating [existing features]. I directed the team not to make the designs too over-exaggerated when it came to the Mega-Evolved Pokémon as a whole. And I committed to creating as much variation as possible.

Which Mega-Evolved Pokémon do you like best, Mr. Sugimori?

Sugimori:
I suppose I really do like the designs that have a little twist the best, like Mega Kangaskhan.

Kangaskhan and Mega Kangaskhan are the same height and only the child that had been in Kangaskhan's pouch gets larger. That's very unique.

Sugimori:
I always wanted to properly show the child in Kangaskhan's pouch somehow. It's always been there as a part of Kangaskhan, so I wanted to see it play a role at some point. Being able to have parent and child fight together is a unique characteristic of Mega Kangaskhan—that's the kind of Mega Evolution I like.

> "If it's not enough to cause controversy, then we haven't made anything that can truly be called new."

I've heard that your roles in the design for the Pokémon in Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon was more that of an observer, supervising and checking the designs, and that you only directed the work on the regional variants.

Sugimori:
That's right. I was responsible for the regional variants. After all, I had the history of working on most of the Pokémon in Pokémon Red and Pokémon Green that became the basis of the regional variants.

I was surprised by the Alolan Raichu! It's too cute!

Sugimori:
I asked Atsuko Nishida, who worked on the original Raichu design, to do the design for Raichu's Alola Form. Nishida insisted that Raichu has always been cuter than people might think, so she came up with this insanely cute design. Raichu looked so soft and fluffy, so I asked, "What is this?" And she told me that the motif behind the design was bread. (Laughs.) It's a Mouse Pokémon, so I did have to wonder what bread had to do with anything... (Laughs.) We added the bit about the pancakes to its design to really play up that cuteness.

Which regional variants did you work on yourself, Mr. Sugimori?

Sugimori:
Exeggutor's Alola Form turned out well. It really embodies the worldview of the Alola region and the idea of the regional variants. It has impact, and once you learn that it's a Dragon-type Pokémon, it does look like one. And most of all, the logic and design came together so well with the idea that its neck had grown so long because the sunlight is so strong.

With each new entry in the Pokémon series, there are new ways to define Pokémon—with things like the Ultra Beasts—and the mysteries of the Pokémon ecology just keep growing.

Sugimori:
That's what we're going for. If our players ever say, "It's just like I imagined," then I think that's when we've failed. If it's not enough to cause controversy, then we haven't made anything that can truly be called new, and whatever we do make will be quickly forgotten.

Mr. Sugimori, you seem to really want to create something that can remain evergreen, starting all the way from the character design.

Sugimori:
That's true. I don't have such lofty dreams of creating something that will last for perpetuity or anything. But I do think it would be no good to create something that you forget the instant after you see it. There is a war raging in the world right now between popular characters—there are more monsters and cute girls than you can shake a stick at. In such an environment, I think it's really important to create designs that will spark curiosity in the people who see them and linger in their minds for a long time.

Checklist of Pokémon Species in National Pokédex Order

This checklist covers the 806 species discovered to date in the National Pokédex. Remember that a Pokémon species will count as registered in your Pokédex as long as you have at least one of its forms, but many Pokémon have more than one form that they can appear in. If you see multiple forms that share the same Pokédex number, it is up to you to decide whether you would like to try to collect them all to store in your PC Boxes or your Online Boxes in Pokémon Bank, or consider your collection complete once you have at least one.

TIP

Special and more powerful forms can be assumed during battle by some Pokémon. They are featured in the list on page 7.

Pokémon whose names appear in bold are in the Alola Pokédex in Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon. Pokémon species marked in italic are not necessary to have a Pokédex that is considered complete, as they can be very difficult to obtain. They cannot be caught within most Pokémon games, and instead they can only be obtained through special distributions. While no collection may feel entirely complete without them, luckily your Pokédex itself will be. You do not have to obtain these Pokémon to achieve 100% completion for Regional or National Pokédexes.

Completing the National Pokédex

Completing a Pokédex is no simple task. Over 550 species of Pokémon can be obtained by a dedicated Trainer adventuring in Alola in Pokémon Ultra Sun or Pokémon Ultra Moon. Getting them all would be more than enough to complete your Alola Regional Pokédex. But if you hope to complete what we call the National Pokédex, there are over 800 Pokémon species that have been discovered to date!

TIP

As you may have read in the Pokémon Checklist, you don't have to obtain every last Pokémon to complete your Pokédex. Rare Pokémon known as Mythical Pokémon are only obtainable through special distributions. Since they are so hard to come by, your Pokédex will be considered complete by Pokémon Professors everywhere, even if you are missing these Mythical Pokémon. You also only have to obtain one form of a species for that species to be registered in your Pokédex, even if many other forms may exist.

What is a National Pokédex? If you are new to the world of Pokémon, you might be wondering what a National Pokédex is. The National Pokédex is the complete collection of all Pokémon species that have been discovered. You can transfer Pokémon into Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon that do not appear in the Alola Pokédex and fill your PC Boxes with every known species of Pokémon. If you wish to see all of their Pokédex entries, though, you will need to complete your National Pokédex in the Pokémon Bank application.

You can read about Pokémon Bank and how to use it on page 22. ➊

MAIN WAY TO OBTAIN

Receive a Phantump in a trade and it will immediately evolve into Trevenant. You can trade a Phantump with a person in Tapu Village.

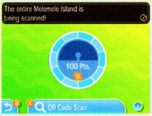
The good news is, there are a lot of different ways you can add Pokémon to your collection. The majority of the Pokémon to be found in Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon can be added to your Pokédex using the following methods. You will find them referred to often in the Main Way to Obtain section of each Pokémon's entry in this book.

You will see boxes like this in each Pokémon's entry. They contain information about recommended ways you can obtain the Pokémon for yourself.

Catch wild Pokémon

The most basic method is to encounter Pokémon in the wild by wandering around in places like tall grass or caves on the various islands, and then try to catch them in battle. This will be discussed in more detail on the next page.

Use Island Scan



The entire Melemele Island is being scanned!

Island Scan is a feature that can be used in Pokémon Sun, Pokémon Moon, Pokémon Ultra Sun, and Pokémon Ultra Moon to encounter Pokémon that do not appear in the Alola Pokédex. Read more about it on page 15.

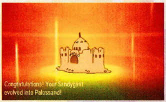
Explore Ultra Space

As you progress through your adventure in Pokémon Ultra Sun or Pokémon Ultra Moon, you'll eventually be able to explore Ultra Space using Ultra Warp Ride (p. 16). Ultra Space is a treasure trove of rare and unusual Pokémon!

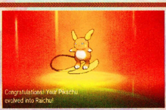
Hatch Eggs

Some Pokémon won't appear in the wild, but you can hatch them from Pokémon Eggs. There are some tricks to finding Pokémon Eggs that will hatch into the Pokémon you want, so if you want to find out more, turn to page 17.

Evolve Pokémon



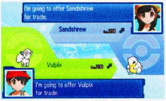
Congratulations! Your Sandygast evolved into Palossand!



Congratulations! Your Pikachu evolved into Raichu!

Some Pokémon also evolve into different species under certain conditions. For most Pokémon the condition is reaching a certain level, but there are other and trickier conditions as well, as you can read more about on pages 16 and 17.

Trade Pokémon



I'm going to offer Sandshrew for trade.

I'm going to offer Vulpix for trade.

Some Pokémon might not be obtainable in the version of the game you are playing or may need to be traded to evolve. Or it might just be easier to get them in a trade. Learn about different ways to trade starting on page 21.

Trading Pokémon Is Key to Completing Your Pokédex

Some Pokémon are known as version exclusives and can only be obtained in certain versions of the game. If you aren't playing that version, you will need to find other Trainers to trade with. Trade with friends who are also playing Pokémon or, if you have an Internet connection, you can easily find other Trainers from all around the world who are eager to trade with you. You can also use trading as a way to get your hands on any Pokémon that you're having trouble obtaining on your own, so remember that this is always an option even if it's not listed in the Main Way to Obtain box for a particular species.

Catching Pokémon

Catching Pokémon in the wild is the most basic way of registering them in your Pokédex. Still, that doesn't mean it's always as simple as running around throwing Poké Balls at anything that moves! Different Pokémon live in different environments, and some Pokémon can only be encountered during certain weather conditions or specific times of day. Check out the guide below so that you'll know what you're looking for when a Pokémon's Main Way to Obtain text refers to things like tall grass or the water's surface.

Main places Pokémon can be encountered

				Tall Grass	Caves	Deserts	Flowers	Water Surface
Recommended Poké Ball: Poké Ball, Great Ball, Ultra Ball, etc.	Recommended Poké Ball: Dusk Ball	Recommended Poké Ball: Poké Ball, Great Ball, Ultra Ball, etc.	Recommended Poké Ball: Poké Ball, Great Ball, Ultra Ball, etc.	Recommended Poké Ball: Net Ball, Dive Ball

Reduce the Pokémon's HP to yellow or red before throwing most Poké Balls — A Pokémon becomes easier to catch the lower its HP gets. If its HP is in the red, it will be even easier to catch than when it is in the yellow. Or you can try using a Quick Ball at the start of a battle, without dealing any damage at all!

Use the right Poké Ball for the situation to get the most benefit — For example, use Dive Balls against Pokémon that live in the water or Dusk Balls against Pokémon in caves. The Poké Balls you can get in Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon, and their effects, are listed on page 523.

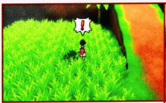
Use moves or Abilities to inflict status conditions on the wild Pokémon — The Frozen or Asleep conditions are the most effective in making a wild Pokémon easier to catch, but the Frozen condition can be difficult to inflict so you may want to focus on using other status conditions. Check out the list of moves beginning on page 488, and the Abilities list on page 507, to find ways to inflict status conditions.

Use moves that will reduce HP without knocking the Pokémon out — False Swipe is a good move choice because it always leaves a target with 1 HP without making it faint! See which Pokémon can learn it on page 562, and learn how to get the TM in Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon on page 506.

Use moves or Abilities to pin down Pokémon that flee — If Pokémon keep escaping from battle, consider moves like Mean Look, Spider Web, or Block, or Abilities like Shadow Tag or Arena Trap. They prevent an opposing Pokémon from escaping from the battle.

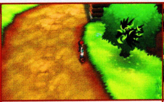
Ambush encounters

Normally, Pokémon leap out at you without warning, but some are a bit more obvious. If you see rustling in the patches of tall grass, or dirt clouds on the ground, be careful—get too close, and the Pokémon causing the rustling or the dust will charge right at you. Sometimes, these Pokémon will even drop items in all the excitement. Keep your eye open for shiny objects on the ground after battles against them.



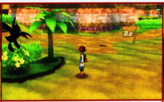
Rustling grass

In tall grass, a Pokémon preparing an ambush will cause the grass to rustle. It will rush toward you if you step into the grass.



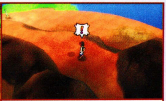
Rustling tree

As you travel, you'll come across trees that rustle and shake. Get too close, and a Pokémon will leap down at you.



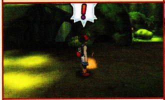
Rustling bush

Pokémon sometimes hide in bushes, too. If you want to avoid a battle, give them some distance.



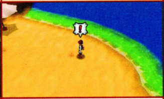
Shadows on the ground

Keep your eye open for shadows on the ground. If you step onto one, a Pokémon will swoop down to battle you.



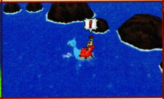
Dust clouds

Be aware of small holes in rocky walls. Pokémon will often rush out in a cloud of dust if you get too close.



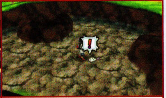
Sand clouds

On beaches and in deserts, Pokémon burrow into the sand, kicking up clouds as they do. If you get too close, they'll leap out.



Water splashes

As you ride your Ride Pokémon over the water, you may see splashing water where Pokémon can be found. Get close, and they'll attack!



Wimpod

With Wimpod, you're the one doing the ambushing! This Pokémon tries to flee when it is approached. Corner it to catch it!

Day and night exclusives

Some Pokémon in Alola only appear or evolve during the day, or only during the night. For example, Yungoos will appear during the day on Route 1, while Rattata will appear during the night. The day/night cycle of Pokémon Ultra Sun will be the same as the time your Nintendo 3DS system is set to, while in Pokémon Ultra Moon day and night are reversed. The table below should help you keep on schedule.

Time periods in Pokémon Ultra Sun (simplified)

SOS battles

When wild Pokémon are feeling threatened during a battle in Alola, they sometimes call for an ally. This turns a normal encounter into an SOS battle. Most Pokémon call in the same species as themselves, but not all Pokémon. This is important because some Pokémon species can only be encountered in Alola when they are summoned into SOS battles as allies.

If you want to catch a Mareanie, for example, you'll need to encourage a Corsola to call for help in battle. It will never appear in the wild otherwise! If a Pokémon that you are looking for says in its Main Way to Obtain section that it appears as an SOS ally, then use the tips on the next page to try to encounter it.

Make a wild Pokémon feel like it needs a bit of help — Pokémon become more likely to call for an ally when their HP is low, so try to get it into the red. If your Pokémon has an Ability like Intimidate, Pressure, or Unnerve, it will also make a wild Pokémon more prone to want help.

Use False Swipe and non-damaging moves on the original Pokémon — You don't want to accidentally knock out the original Pokémon if you're still waiting for it to call in another species that you're seeking. Use False Swipe or status moves to keep the battle going as long as you need.

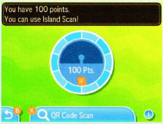
Use an Adrenaline Orb to make Pokémon call for more than one ally — On their own, a wild Pokémon will only call in one ally when in distress. If that Pokémon wasn't the one you were seeking, you can knock it out, but then what? Then you use an Adrenaline Orb to get the original Pokémon to call for more help.

Use supereffective moves whenever possible — Seeing that you can use a supereffective move against their ally as soon as they enter the fray will really spook Pokémon, and it makes it more likely they will call in a new ally on the next turn, if you have used an Adrenaline Orb in the battle.

Some Pokémon also appear as allies but only during certain weather conditions. For example, if you want to catch a Goomy in Lush Jungle, you'll need it to be raining when a Pokémon calls for help. Weather patterns shift throughout the day, but you can also change the weather yourself with moves like Rain Dance, Sunny Day, Hail, and Sandstorm. For more detailed information about weather in Alola, check out Pokémon Ultra Sun & Pokémon Ultra Moon: The Official Alola Region Strategy Guide.

Island Scan

In Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon, you'll be able to use the QR Scanner from your X menu at almost any time. Scan in QR Code patterns with it, and you'll register new Pokémon as Seen in your Pokédex—and earn points for Island Scan. Once you get 100 points, you can use Island Scan to encounter Pokémon not otherwise found in Alola.



You have 100 points.
You can use Island Scan!

Once you have 100 points in the QR Scanner, press ⓧ to move to Island Scan, and then activate the scan by holding down R. It will detect a trace of a Pokémon. Which Pokémon will be decided by what day of the week it is and what island you are on when you use your Island Scan. Head to the location where the trace was detected, and try to catch that rare Pokémon!

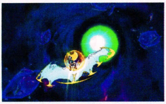
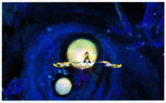
Fossils

Once you reach Route 8 on Akala Island, you can head off the main path to find a small building that is called the Fossil Restoration Center. As the name implies, you can bring Pokémon Fossils here to have them restored into living Pokémon species. If a Pokémon's Main Way to Obtain text says that you must restore it from a Fossil, turn to the Items list beginning on page 515 to learn how to obtain one in your game.

Ultra Warp Ride

During your adventure in Pokémon Ultra Sun or Pokémon Ultra Moon, you'll be called upon to save the Alola region itself. Once this happens, you'll be granted the ability to travel through Ultra Space and visit various other worlds.





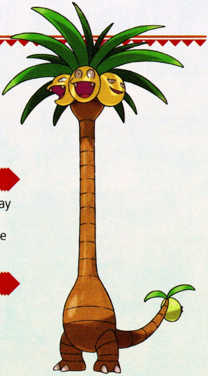
Once in Ultra Space, you'll see warp holes of various colors. These lead to unusual worlds, where you'll be able to encounter a Pokémon that you would not normally find in the Alola region. Red, green, yellow, and blue warp holes will lead to worlds where you'll encounter a single Pokémon at random, from among a small list of Pokémon that are found in that world. If you don't find the one you want on that visit, you'll have to try again. White warp holes lead to worlds where you'll be able to encounter and catch Ultra Beasts.

You may also notice that some warp holes shine a bit more elaborately than others, surrounded by dazzling light. The more brilliant a warp hole is, the better your chance of encountering a rare Pokémon—even Legendary Pokémon or rare UBs! All of the details about this feature are explained in Pokémon Ultra Sun & Pokémon Ultra Moon: The Official Alola Region Strategy Guide.

Evolving Pokémon

What?
Buneary is evolving!

Some Pokémon are only obtainable by evolving an earlier species in their Evolution line. But that can be easier said than done—there are many ways a Pokémon can evolve, and some aren't as obvious as others.



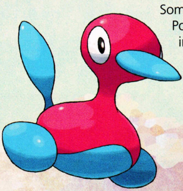
Leveling up

This is the most straightforward way for Pokémon to evolve. If the Main Way to Obtain section for a Pokémon says that it evolves at a certain level, then all you have to do is raise the Pokémon to that level, and you will obtain the Pokémon Evolution you seek.

Using an item

Some Pokémon require you to use a special item on them to evolve. If an item is listed in their description, turn to the Items list beginning on page 515 and find the item to learn how you can obtain one in your game. Then use it from your Bag when the Pokémon is in your party, and it should evolve at once.

Trading Pokémon

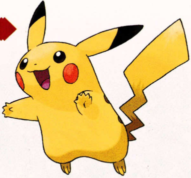


Some Pokémon evolve through trading. If you want to get one of these Pokémon, find a friend who is willing to send you the pre-evolved Pokémon in a trade to trigger its Evolution. You can also look for the pre-evolved Pokémon on the GTS to see if you can obtain it that way.

TIP

Some Pokémon need to be holding a specific item when they are traded to evolve. Porygon, for example, will only evolve into Porygon2 if it is traded while holding the item Up-Grade. Such info will be present in the Evolution box in each Pokémon's entry, so check there if you're having trouble evolving a Pokémon.

High friendship



Some Pokémon only evolve when they feel very friendly toward their Trainers. Friendliness rises automatically as long as you keep the Pokémon in your party, but there are also ways to give it boosts. There are Berries that raise friendship, as you can find in the Items list, and Pokémon just love getting a lomi lomi massage in Konikoni City! You can also use a held item, like the Soothe Bell, to increase Pokémon's friendship, or try to catch Pokémon in special Poké Balls such as Friend Balls or Luxury Balls.

Other ways to evolve your Pokémon

The ways mentioned above are the most common, but there are some unique Pokémon that require some very special conditions to evolve. Eevee, for example, will evolve into Leafeon or Glaceon if it levels up while near the moss-covered rock in Lush Jungle or the ice-covered rock found on Mount Lanakila. Some Pokémon evolve only when they learn a specific move and then level up (or learn a new move upon leveling up). For example, if you want Steenee to evolve into Tsareena, level it up to Lv. 29. It will learn Stomp and evolve. If you have a Steenee that is already above Lv. 29, have it remember Stomp from Madam Memorial in the Mount Lanakila Pokémon Center, then level it up and it will evolve. There are some Pokémon that will only evolve during the night or day, or only if you have certain other Pokémon in your party, too. Check out the Evolution box and carefully read the Main Way to Obtain section for each Pokémon to be sure you aren't missing anything.

Hatching Eggs

Another way of obtaining Pokémon is by hatching Pokémon Eggs found at the Pokémon Nursery in Alola's Paniola Ranch. In order to find Eggs, you will need to leave two Pokémon at the Pokémon Nursery. Below are some of the basics of finding Pokémon Eggs.

Leave two compatible Pokémon at the Pokémon Nursery
You must leave two Pokémon of opposite genders at the Pokémon Nursery. Or one of the Pokémon must be Ditto, an unusual Pokémon that can find Eggs with almost any other Pokémon—even Pokémon with an unknown gender.

Make sure the Pokémon share at least one Egg Group
You'll see a Pokémon's Egg Group on the left-hand side of its Pokédex entry. Two Pokémon must share an Egg Group to find an Egg together (unless one is Ditto—Ditto's Egg Group is also compatible with all other Egg Groups.)

Get the Oval Charm, if you can
The Oval Charm increases your chances of finding Pokémon Eggs, just by having it in your Bag. Learn more about how to get one in the Items list beginning on page 515.

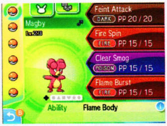
An Egg found by a male and female Pokémon will hatch into the same Pokémon species as the female Pokémon, or an earlier species in its Evolution chain. An Egg found by a Pokémon left with a Ditto will always take after the non-Ditto Pokémon when it comes to species.

TIP

For some Pokémon, it is impossible to find Eggs. These Pokémon are typically unique and rare, like Legendary Pokémon or Ultra Beasts. These Pokémon will always be part of the No Eggs Discovered group, so be sure to check the Pokédex and make sure you don't waste time and money by leaving one of them at the Nursery.

Hatching Eggs

So, you've found an Egg—now what do you do? Well, the only thing to do with a Pokémon Egg is to make it hatch! Pokémon Eggs will hatch just by carrying them around with you as part of your party, but there are ways to help the process along as well.



Have a Pokémon with the Magma Armor or Flame Body Ability in your party: If you have a Pokémon with either of these Abilities in your party, you'll find that Pokémon Eggs will hatch faster as you explore Alola. Some examples of Pokémon with these Abilities are Magby and Magmar, which can be found at Wela Volcano Park.

I'll be at your service! Zzt!

Make use of Rotom Powers: Once you unlock Rotom's Roto Loto feature, you'll occasionally be able to win Roto Hatches. These will help Eggs in your party hatch quicker for a set period of time. Combine these with the Abilities mentioned above to really speed things up.

Leave Eggs at Isle Avue of Poké Pelago: Once you develop Isle Avue at Poké Pelago, you'll be able to leave Pokémon Eggs in the hot springs there. This makes it possible to hatch entire groups of Eggs at once, without having them in your party. You can learn all about Poké Pelago in Pokémon Ultra Sun & Pokémon Ultra Moon: The Official Alola Region Strategy Guide.

Pokémon Eggs

The following pages feature the complete Egg Group tables for all Pokémon discovered to date. Use it to try to find pairs of compatible Pokémon you can leave at the Pokémon Nursery together. The first column shows National Pokédex numbers, allowing you to turn to a Pokémon's entry and learn more about them.

Pokémon species that have multiple forms, like Raichu, still belong to the same Egg Groups in general, so each species is only listed once. The only exception are some unusual Pokémon forms received as special gifts from The Pokémon Company International, like Ash-Greninja or the special Pikachu wearing its Trainer's caps. Pokémon Eggs have never been discovered from these unusual forms.

Some Pokémon are missing from these tables. If a Pokémon is not listed in any Egg Group, that means that it will not discover Pokémon Eggs, no matter what other Pokémon you leave it at the Pokémon Nursery with or for how long.

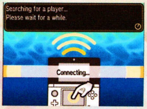
Trading Pokémon

In Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon, you can trade with nearby friends from early in your game using Quick Link, and with Trainers from around the globe once you have access to Festival Plaza. Use trades to get hard-to-obtain Pokémon, version-exclusive Pokémon, or Pokémon that only evolve through trade. You can even trade with players of Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon in Festival Plaza for Pokémon or forms obtained in those games!

TIP

You can trade Pokémon that are holding items. There are a few reasons you may want to do this. It's a handy way to give a friend an item they need, or you can add a little surprise for another player over the GTS, but also there are some Pokémon that only evolve when they're holding specific items when they're traded!

Quick Link

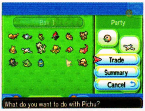


Searching for a player...
Please wait for a while.

Connecting...

Quick Link is the easiest way to trade with friends that are nearby. You can choose Quick Link by opening your X menu and selecting Quick Link from there. Once both you and your friend have selected Quick Link, touch and hold your finger or stylus to your respective touch screens, or press and hold Ⓐ at the same time. Your systems should recognize each other after a few seconds, and then you'll be able to trade.

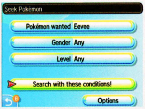
Link Trade



What do you want to do with Pichu?

Link Trade is another way that you can trade Pokémon with friends, but it also allows you to trade with people from around the world using Festival Plaza. Once in Festival Plaza, tap Trade on the lower screen, and then select Link Trade. You'll be able to choose a player from either your guest list or VIP list who you want to trade with. All that's left is choosing the Pokémon you want to offer and you'll be ready to make a trade!

GTS



Seek Pokémon

Pokémon wanted Eevee

Gender Any

Level Any

The Global Trade Station, or GTS, is the most versatile way you can trade Pokémon with other players. It lets you search for Pokémon from all Pokémon players around the world who are also using the GTS. Like a Link Trade, you access it from Festival Plaza. Tap Trade on the lower screen, but this time select GTS. Then you'll have two options: Seek Pokémon or Deposit Pokémon.

If you select Seek Pokémon, you'll be able to enter different criteria for the Pokémon you're looking for, such as species, gender, and level range. You'll be presented with a list of deposited Pokémon that fit your criteria, and if you have a Pokémon that the other person wants, you'll be able to make the trade.

Deposit Pokémon allows you to deposit a Pokémon of your choosing and specify what kind of Pokémon you'd like to get in return. If another player finds your Pokémon and is willing to trade for a Pokémon matching your criteria, they'll initiate the trade and your Pokémon will be traded. This can happen even if you don't have your game open.

TIP

There's a fourth method of trading Pokémon called Wonder Trade. With Wonder Trade, you select a Pokémon to be traded, and then wait to see what you receive in return! There's no way to predict what you'll get, making this a fun way to trade if you're in the mood for a little excitement.

Pokémon Bank & Poké Transporter

Last but not least, you'll have to fill in all those gaps in your Pokédex if you're hoping to catch them all. Remember that not all known species of Pokémon can be found in Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon. Any Pokémon entry that mentions Pokémon Bank in its Main Way to Obtain information cannot be obtained in these two games. That leaves you with two options: try to find it on the GTS or bring it from a past Pokémon game.

If you have played previous Pokémon games, like Pokémon X, Pokémon Y, Pokémon Omega Ruby, or Pokémon Alpha Sapphire, you can use Pokémon Bank to bring the Pokémon you caught in those games to Pokémon Ultra Sun or Pokémon Ultra Moon. You can also simply keep them in your Online Boxes in Pokémon Bank, and maintain your National Pokédex there.

TIP

You can also bring Pokémon from even older Pokémon titles by using the linked application Poké Transporter.

Pokémon Bank is a paid service that you can choose to use if you download the application in your Nintendo 3DS system's eShop. It allows you to store Pokémon in Online Boxes and move Pokémon between core Pokémon titles released for the Nintendo 3DS family of systems. You can also view the National Pokédex within it, reading Pokédex entries and more from past games. And you can freely search through your ever-growing collection of Pokémon using detailed search parameters to find exactly the Pokémon you need. ① Pokémon's name and category

Beside the checkbox where you can mark if you've caught a particular Pokémon or not, you will find the name of the Pokémon species. Below this is the Pokémon's category. Even different Pokémon species may fall into the same category.

② Form

Some Pokémon can appear in more than one form. If so, the form name will appear here to let you know which form exactly you are seeing.

③ Pokédex numbers

The National Pokédex number tells you where a species falls in the index of all Pokémon species discovered to date. If the species appears in Alola in Pokémon Ultra Sun or Pokémon Ultra Moon, you will also see its Alola Pokédex number below its National Pokédex number.

④ Type

The Pokémon's type. Some Pokémon have two types.

⑤ Height, weight, and items sometimes held in the wild

The height and weight of the Pokémon is listed here. Beneath this area, you may see the name and image of items that this species can sometimes be found holding when you catch one in the wild.

⑥ Gender differences

This box shows how male and female specimens appear in the game. Pokémon can look different depending on their gender, or they may look the same. Some Pokémon have only ever been found to have one gender, and others have no known gender at all!

⑦ Pokédex entries

Pokédex entries tell you a bit more about a Pokémon species. If the Pokémon appears in the Alola Pokédex, you will see entries from Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon here. Otherwise, you will see entries from Pokémon X and Pokémon Y.

⑧ Evolution

If a Pokémon is capable of Evolution, you will see how it evolves in this box. The text lets you know what particular conditions must be met to evolve each Pokémon.

⑨ Main way to obtain

Here is where you find how to get this Pokémon for your own. Most Pokémon can be obtained in more than one way, so consider this a recommendation, and remember that you can always try to use the GTS (p. 22) or trade with friends.

⑩ Ability and Hidden Ability

If two Abilities are listed, then a Pokémon of this species may have either one of those two when encountered in the wild. Hidden Abilities are much rarer, and in the Alola region, you will only find Pokémon with a Hidden Ability when they appear as allies in SOS battles.

⑪ Species strengths

These diamonds indicate how well this species' stats stack up when compared to other Pokémon in the National Pokédex. These species strengths are one of the three main factors that go into calculating a Pokémon's final stats, the other two being base stats and individual strengths. For more detailed strategy insights, check out Pokémon Ultra Sun & Pokémon Ultra Moon: The Official Alola Region Strategy Guide.

⑫ Egg Groups

The Egg Group the Pokémon belongs to. When two Egg Groups are listed, the Pokémon belongs to both. Two Pokémon left at the Pokémon Nursery together must share an Egg Group—or one must be a Ditto—in order to find a Pokémon Egg.

⑬ Damage taken in normal battles

These tables provide a quick reference for how much damage this Pokémon will take from moves of the various types used in battles. If the effect of one of its Abilities might change how much damage the Pokémon takes from moves of a particular type, that type will be marked with !.

⑭ Level-up moves

A list of moves that the Pokémon can learn simply by leveling up, as well as the levels at which they learn them. Any moves listed as Lv. 1 are moves that Pokémon might already know when caught in the wild or hatched from an Egg.

⑮ TM moves

A list of moves the Pokémon can learn by using an item called a TM. TMs can be found all around Alola, so check out the list on page 506 if you are looking for one in particular.

⑯ Moves learned when evolving

Some Pokémon may be able to learn a move when they evolve from their previous Evolution. Such moves will be listed in this table. These are often moves they might have otherwise known from Lv. 1.

⑰ Moves taught by people

These moves may be taught to the Pokémon by special Move Tutors. Some require that particular conditions be met before they can be learned. Learn more from the table on page 505.

⑱ Moves learned in exchange for BP

These moves can be taught to the Pokémon at special locations in Alola. You will need to hand over some BP (Battle Points or Beach Points) to have your Pokémon learn these moves. See where you can learn each move from the list on page 505, and get lots of BP from using Mantine Surf or battling in the Battle Tree or Battle Royal Dome. Learn more in Pokémon Ultra Sun & Pokémon Ultra Moon: The Official Alola Region Strategy Guide.

⑲ Exclusive Z-Move

All Pokémon can use type-based Z-Moves if they have the correct Z-Crystal. But some Pokémon can also use an exclusive Z-Move that no other Pokémon species can use. If so, it will be listed here along with the base move that the Pokémon must know in order to use this special Z-Move. To track down all of the Z-Crystals, see the list on page 524.

⑳ Egg Moves

These moves may be learned by the Pokémon upon hatching from an Egg as long as they are known by one of the Pokémon you left at the Pokémon Nursery when finding an Egg. Egg Moves are moves that a Pokémon would normally never be able to learn by other means.

Understanding the move tables

The move tables contain a great deal of information in a very small space. Understand what each column means with the keys below.

Move List Guide
LV.	The level at which the move can be learned
NO.	The number of the TM that teaches the move
TYPE	The move's type
KIND	Whether the move is a physical, special, or status move (A physical move does more damage the higher the Attack stat is. Damage is lessened when the target has a high Defense stat. A special move does more damage the higher the Sp. Atk stat is. Damage is lessened when the target has a high Sp. Def stat. A status move affects stats or inflicts a status condition on the target(s), or causes various other effects.)
POW.	The move's power
ACC.	The move's accuracy (out of 100 maximum)
PP	How many times the move can be used before the Pokémon must have its move's PP restored with an item or at a Pokémon Center
Range	The number and range of targets the move can affect

Range Guide
Normal	The move affects the selected target. If the move is used by a Pokémon during a Double Battle, Multi Battle, or Battle Royal, the move can target any of the three other Pokémon (including an ally).
Self	The move affects only the user.
1 Ally	The move affects an adjacent Pokémon during a Double Battle, Multi Battle, or Battle Royal. It has no effect in a Single Battle.
Self/Ally	The move affects the user or an ally. In a Single Battle or Battle Royal, it can affect the user, and in a Double Battle or Multi Battle, it can affect either the user or an ally.
Your Party	The move affects your entire party, including party Pokémon that are still in their Poké Balls.
1 Random	The move affects one of the opposing Pokémon at random.
Many Others	The move affects multiple Pokémon at the same time. If the move is used by a Pokémon during a Double Battle, Multi Battle, or Battle Royal, the move will affect all opposing Pokémon.
Adjacent	The move affects the surrounding Pokémon at the same time. If the move is used by a Pokémon during a Double Battle, Multi Battle, or Battle Royal, the move will affect all three of the other Pokémon (including any allies) simultaneously.
Your Side	The move affects your side of the field. In a Double Battle or Multi Battle, these effects will be felt by the user and any ally Pokémon. In a Battle Royal, they will only be felt by the user. Since the move affects the field, the move's effects continue even if the Pokémon are swapped out (except for moves that only work for one turn).
Other Side	The move affects the opponent's side of the field. Since the move affects the field, the move's effects continue even if the Pokémon are swapped out (except for moves that only work for one turn).
Both Sides	The move affects the entire field and all Pokémon on it. Since the move affects the field, the move's effects continue even if Pokémon are swapped out.
Varies	The move is influenced by things such as the opposing Pokémon's move or the user's type, so the effect and range are not fixed.

Some Pokémon undergo unusual transformations in battle when they are holding particular items or using particular moves. The most notable example of this is Mega Evolution. These temporary transformations get their own entries in the Pokédex, and they contain slightly different information from normal entries.

① Name and category

Here you will find the name of this special form, as well as the Pokémon's category.

② Type

The Pokémon's type or types. These transformations might change the Pokémon's normal types. Any changed type will be outlined in blue.

③ Height and weight

The height and weight of the Pokémon in this form. If either has changed from this species' regular form, it will appear in blue.

④ Mega Evolution

This box shows the Pokémon before and after undergoing Mega Evolution. The text lets you know what particular conditions must be met for this Pokémon to Mega Evolve.

⑤ Gender differences, Ability, and species strengths

Gender information appears here, as well as the Ability that the Pokémon has in this form and its species strengths in this form. If its Ability has changed, or any species strengths have increased, the changes will be marked in blue.

⑥ Damage taken in normal battles

If the Pokémon's type or types change in this form, any type matchups that are affected will be marked in blue.

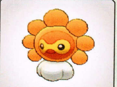
⑦ Required item or move

If a particular item or move is needed to achieve this temporary transformation, it will be listed here, along with some explanation of how it can be obtained.

There are other forms that some Pokémon can take on as well, though. Throughout this guide, you will also see special entries like the one here. They highlight what changes for these different forms and how you can get access to them. Anytime you see a special entry like this, know that these alternate forms do not learn different moves so you can still refer to the move tables in that species' main entry. Only differences are shown in these entries, not everything that stays the same.

Castform's Different Forms

Castform can be encountered in Lush Jungle, Malie Garden, Tapu Village, Haina Desert, Route 17, Exeggutor Island, and Mount Lanakila when weather conditions differ from the lovely clear weather so often found in Alola. Which form it will appear in will depend on the weather you are experiencing at the time of the encounter. It might be Rainy Form Castform on Route 17 (where it always rains), for example, or Snowy Form Castform in the hail that sometimes falls in Tapu Village. Whatever form it is in when you catch it, though, it will return to its normal form once you've caught it in a Poké Ball. Castform can only appear in its alternate forms during battle and only as long as the weather conditions necessary to cause its transformation last.



Castform (Sunny Form)

FIRE

Castform takes this form when the weather conditions change to harsh or extremely harsh sunlight during a battle. It returns to its normal form when the harsh sunlight fades or when the battle ends.

The tip of the male's tail is straight. The female has a notch at the end of its tail.

Its nature is to store up electricity. Forests where nests of Pikachu live are dangerous, since the trees are so often struck by lightning.

While sleeping, it generates electricity in the sacs in its cheeks. If it's not getting enough sleep, it will be able to use only weak electricity.

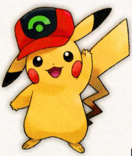
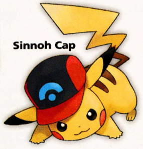
Pikachu Wearing Trainer's Caps

Original Cap Pikachu, Hoenn Cap Pikachu, Sinnoh Cap Pikachu, Unova Cap Pikachu, Kalos Cap Pikachu, and Alola Cap Pikachu were available in Pokémon Sun and Pokémon Moon as part of a special distribution from The Pokémon Company International. Partner Cap Pikachu can be obtained in Pokémon Ultra Sun and Pokémon Ultra Moon by scanning in a special QR Code. If you missed your chance to obtain one of these special forms of Pikachu, watch Pokemon.com for more news.

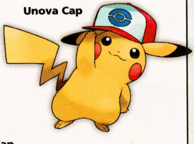
Hoenn Cap



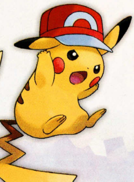
Sinnoh Cap



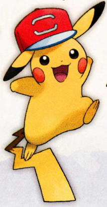
Unova Cap



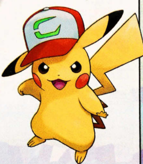
Kalos Cap



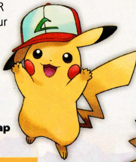
Alola Cap



Partner Cap



Original Cap



This form of Pikachu is somewhat rare. It wears the hat of its Trainer, who is also its partner.

This Pikachu is wearing its Trainer's cap. Since the cap's not the right size, the fit is a bit loose.

Exclusive Z-Move:

If you obtain a piece of Pikashunium Z by taking one of these Pikachu to Pikachu Valley in Pokémon Ultra Sun or Pokémon Ultra Moon and speaking with the female Pikachu there, you can give it to your cap-wearing Pikachu to hold. It will allow these Pikachu to transform the regular move Thunderbolt into the Z-Move 10,000,000 Volt Thunderbolt! This powerful Electric-type move has a power of 195! To learn more about it, turn to the Z-Moves list on page 504.

✓ Raichu

Mouse Pokémon

Height: 2'07" | Weight: 66.1 lbs.

The tip of the male's tail is longer. The tip of the female's tail is shorter.

As electricity builds up inside its body, it becomes more aggressive. One theory is that the electricity buildup is actually causing stress.

Because so many Trainers like the way Pikachu looks, you don't see this Pokémon very often.

EVOLUTION

The smallest of things could cause it to lose its temper. Because it doesn't hold in its stress, this Pokémon can live a long time.

If one gets angry, all the others around it will get angry, so silence is a rare visitor in a troop of Mankey.

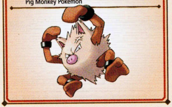
✓ Primeape

Pig Monkey Pokémon



National Pokédex 057 FIGHTING
Alola Pokédex 094
Height: 3'03" | Weight: 70.5 lbs.

It will never forgive opponents who have angered it. Even after it has beaten them down until they can't move, it never ever forgives.

The blood vessels in its brain are sturdier than those of other Pokémon, so it can stay healthy despite its constant raging.

Height: 4'11" | Weight: 105.8 lbs.

The male has longer whiskers. The female has shorter whiskers.

Alakazam uses its psychic powers to make the spoons it carries. Each spoon is an original that there's only one of in the whole world.

If it trusts someone deeply, it will let them have one of its spoons. Anything you eat with that spoon is apparently delicious.

Their food sources have decreased, and their numbers have declined sharply. Sludge ponds are being built to prevent their extinction.

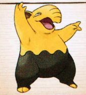
Hypnosis Pokémon



National Pokédex 096 PSYCHIC

Height: 3'03" | Weight: 71.4 lbs.

Same form for male/female

It can be spotted near recreational facilities, intending to eat the pleasant dreams of children who enjoyed themselves there that day.

It puts its prey to sleep and devours their dreams. It seems that bad dreams taste sour, so Drowzee doesn't particularly like eating them.

It checks out whatever's around it by licking everything. If you don't clean off a spot where it's licked you, you'll break out in a rash!

It licks filth clean with its tongue. Whatever it licks always stinks afterward, so whether it's really clean is...questionable.

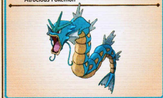
✓ Gyarados

Atrocious Pokémon



National Pokédex	130	WATER
Alola Pokédex	112	FLYING

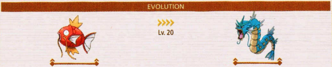
Height: 21'04" | Weight: 518.1 lbs.

The male has blue whiskers. The female has white whiskers.

It fires hyper beams in all directions, burning the surrounding area to ash. There are some regions where it's called "the deity of destruction."

The energy from evolution stimulated its brain cells strongly, causing it to become very ferocious.

EVOLUTION



MAIN WAY TO OBTAIN

Catch it when it appears as an SOS ally called by Magikarp in Seaward Cave. Or obtain a Magikarp, then level it up to Lv. 20 or higher to evolve it into Gyarados.

It likes swimming around with people on its back. In the Alola region, it's an important means of transportation over water.

They've been so cherished that there's now an overabundance. The fish Pokémon population has declined in waters with too many Lapras.

While it can transform into anything, each Ditto apparently has its own strengths and weaknesses when it comes to transformations.

It transforms into whatever it sees. If the thing it's transforming into isn't right in front of it, Ditto relies on its memory—so sometimes it fails.

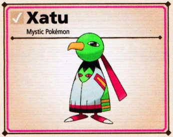
✓ Xatu

Mystic Pokémon



National Pokédex	178	PSYCHIC
Alola Pokédex	253	FLYING

Height: 4'11" | Weight: 33.1 lbs.

The male has three lines on its body. The female has two lines on its body.

It's said that while this Pokémon has the power to predict the future, it's not powerful enough to change the future it sees.

While it can see the future, it has no desire to change it, which is probably why it remains motionless at all times.

Clothing made from Mareep's fleece is easily charged with static electricity, so a special process is used on it.

Rubbing its fleece generates electricity. You'll want to pet it because it's cute, but if you use your bare hand, you'll get a painful shock.

In the places on its body where fleece doesn't grow, its skin is rubbery and doesn't conduct electricity. Those spots are safe to touch.

It stores electricity in its fluffy fleece. If it stores up too much, it will start to go bald in those patches.

Unown's 28 Alphabet-Like Forms

Unown can randomly appear in any of its 28 forms when encountered in the wild. It was possible to encounter Unown in Pokémon Omega Ruby and Pokémon Alpha Sapphire at a certain Mirage spot. Mirage spots were special locations that could only be reached by using the Soar feature to ride around the Hoenn region on the back of Mega Latios or Mega Latias. Unfortunately, Unown are part of the No Eggs Discovered group, so you can't get more of them by hatching Eggs. If you'd like to get one for yourself, and you don't have one of the past Pokémon titles that they appeared in, try searching on the GTS (p. 22)!

Same form for male/female

Friction between the air and its fur produces static electricity. When Electrike runs, it makes a crackling sound.

Static electricity builds up all over its body as strands of its long fur rub together. This Pokémon boasts incredible speed.

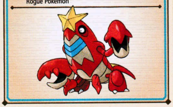
✓ Crawdaunt

Rogue Pokémon



National Pokédex 342 WATER
Alola Pokédex 358 DARK

Height: 3'07" | Weight: 72.3 lbs.

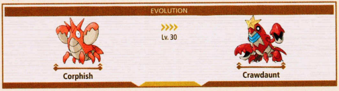
Same form for male/female

Its temperament is rough and it loves to fight, but as soon as its pincers break off, it turns cowardly. It stays timid until they grow back.

Its pincers often fall off. Unlike with Crabrawler or Clauncher, the meat in its claws is utterly nasty and stinking.

EVOLUTION



MAIN WAY TO OBTAIN

Catch it when it appears as an SOS ally called by Corphish in Vast Poni Canyon. Or obtain a Corphish, then level it up to Lv. 30 or higher to evolve it into Crawdaunt.

Height: 1'08" | Weight: 47.4 lbs.

Depictions of Pokémon similar to Baltoy have been found on the walls of caves where primitive humans lived.

When they find others of their kind, they cry out loudly and gather together. Large numbers of them can be found in old graveyards.

The ancient people who made it apparently modeled it after something that descended from the sky. It fires beams from both arms.

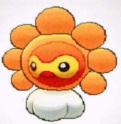
*Weather Ball changes type depending on the current weather conditions. It becomes Fire type in harsh sunlight, Water type when it is raining, Ice type when it is hailing, or Rock type during a sandstorm.

Castform's Different Forms

Castform can be encountered in Lush Jungle, Malie Garden, Tapu Village, Haina Desert, Route 17, Exeggutor Island, and Mount Lanakila when weather conditions differ from the lovely clear weather so often found in Alola. Which form it will appear in will depend on the weather you are experiencing at the time of the encounter. It might be Rainy Form Castform on Route 17 (where it always rains), for example, or Snowy Form Castform in the hail that sometimes falls in Tapu Village. Whatever form it is in when you catch it, though, it will return to its normal form once you've caught it in a Poké Ball. Castform can only appear in its alternate forms during battle and only as long as the weather conditions necessary to cause its transformation last.



Castform (Sunny Form)

FIRE

Castform takes this form when the weather conditions change to harsh or extremely harsh sunlight during a battle. It returns to its normal form when the harsh sunlight fades or when the battle ends.

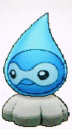
Castform changes to this form when it basks in bright sunlight. When you touch its glowing skin, it feels all dried out!



Castform (Rainy Form)

WATER

Castform takes this form when the weather conditions change to rain or heavy rain during a battle. It returns to its normal form when the rain lifts or when the battle ends.

Castform (Snowy Form)

It's a stuffed toy that was thrown away and became possessed, ever searching for the one who threw it away so it can exact its revenge.

Resentment at being cast off made it spring into being. Some say that treating it well will satisfy it, and it will once more become a stuffed toy.
